

Tinley Park Lions Club Entertain Wives With A Merry Halloween Party

The Tinley Park Lions Club who are well known for their hospitality, put on a wonderful Halloween party at the Community hall Tinley Park for the Lion members and their wives last Thursday night.

Clyde Rice, our genial police magistrate and Robert Rooker, had charge of the party and they certainly proved royal hosts. There was not a dull moment all evening and the guests did not depart until one o'clock Friday morning.

The program opened with a short talk by Lion President Paul H. Rauhoff on the origin of Halloween.

The guests were told that a surprise awaited them on the stage and when the stage curtain was drawn back, a well worn bar, with its bar keeper and accessories, reminding one of the pre-Volstead days, was shown. An old time soak, the familiar barroom quartet and the dance hall girl kept the audience in a laughing mood. The scene was so realistic that some of the older Lions felt thirsty. Art Schoeneck took the part of the bar keeper to perfection. Selby Hirsch, Ernie Anderson and Clyde Rice completed the quartet. Ed. Snyder took the part of "the old soak" and was a scream.

Dances and various stunts enlivened the program and Bert Beatty and Witt Chura of Blue Island furnished as much and as good music as has been played in this town. Mrs. Art Schoeneck won both in the peanut and puffed rice races and Mr. Schoeneck won the parade prize. Mrs. Frank Mancke won a splendid Spanish Shawl.

At mid-night the guests repaired to the basement where long tables were set loaded with good things to eat. The Lions showed they were excellent cooks and waiters. Impromptu speeches by Lion officers and members and compliments from the Lions wives and the raring of the Lions were the features of this part of the program. The basement was prettily decorated with the proverbial black cats, pumpkin faces, etc.

Lions Rice and Rooker deserve a lot of credit for their excellent program and the good time they showed the guests.

Even tho the weather was real moist out of doors, this did not in no wise dampen the spirit of the merry making Lions.

Why He Buys Coal From M. O. House

To the Editor:-

In answer to last weeks issue signed Fairplay. Why buy coal from a mail order house?

I will say if the local coal dealer will give you as fair a chance as the Mail Order House, that is in quality and price why we farmers surely would patronize home trade more.

"Mr. Fairplay" says the Farmers club together and pay cash in advance and do not see what grade of coal they are getting but have to take it. There is absolutely no truth in that the coal is shipped under these conditions, examine coal upon arrival and if not exactly as represented return it at the Mail Order House's expense, but we found it as represented also weights guaranteed.

Now Mr. Fairplay says that when the farmers buy coal from the local dealer they usually charge it and the dealer can carry them for a year or more before he gets his money.

I think he can well afford to carry them longer then that figuring quality and the difference in price between local dealer and mail order house, good interest on your money invested.

$60,000 STILL SIEZED NEAR ORLAND PARK

Last Friday morning eleven prohibition agents from Chicago swooped down on the Orland territory and raided a farm still on 167th st. near 108th ave., said to have been valued at $60,000. The plant was located in a barn on the Waller farm, reported to be rented to Arthur Steffes.

The still which had a daily capacity of 2,000 gallons was destroyed with 600 gallons of alcohol in process of distillation. It is said that the agents remarked that they had seldom seen such a fine still or tasted such good whiskey.

The operators of the still escaped only two workers. John Smukowski and Gus Cuneo were caught. The case was set to come before Commissioner Walker Monday morning.

A new Essex coupe belonging to Jack Gorman, a roomer and a new Hudson belonging to Arthur Steffes are stored in the Federal garage in Chicago. Two trucks and several cars of the agents were filled with all the valuable parts of the still, as well as $500 worth of tools. The Federal agents were "tipped" by a "business" competitor.

Old Mokena Landmark Destroyed By Fire of Unknown Origin

Fire of unknown origin destroyed the Fisher building an old landmark of Mokena early Saturday morning.

Mrs. Moore who is visiting at the home of Mrs. Lizzie Moriarty adjoining the Fisher place, was awakened about two o'clock Saturday morning by the sound of breaking glass and the smell of smoke. She in turn aroused Mrs. Moriarty who went to the Fisher building and saw the west side of the building was on fire. She aroused Tom Hommerding, a neighbor. The fire siren was turned on and in a short time a great crowd and the volunteer fire men were on the scene. The blaze was a stubborn one. The fire appeared to be between the walls. Soon as one part of the blaze was checked, the flames burst out in another spot until the building was doomed.

The west half of the building was occupied by the Bethard Chevrolet Sales and Service and garage. All the equipment and tools of the garage and the sales room furniture burned. The loss of this concern is said to be $2500.

The upstairs and the east half of the building was occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Fred Brown as a rooming house, ice cream parlor and lunch room. Everything in this section fell prey to the flames entailing a loss of about $2700 with no insurance to cover the loss.

The building was owned by Mrs. Ethel Fisher of Joliet, widow of the late Walter Fisher who was killed several years ago while attempting to capture a mail bandit. The building was insured for $3500.

The structure was a long rambling two story building and was erected by John Schubert in 1882. It was used as a hardware store by Mr. Schubert and later by Jacob Zahn and Wm. Niethammer. Walter Fisher purchased the property a few years ago and opened a general store in it. The post-office also was located in this place for a short time. After the death of Mr. Fisher an A. & P. store occupied the building. After this store quit business the Bethard Sales and Service took possession. Mrs. Fisher who had a dry goods store in the east half of the building sold out sometime ago and moved to Joliet. It was fortunate that there was no strong wind blowing at the time of the fire, otherwise the neighboring dwellings and the whole northeast section of the village would have been endangered.

Unnatural History Notes

There's a lot of things you never learn at school,
There's a lot of things that's never taught by rule;
There's an awful lot of knowledge
That you never get at college;
There's a lot of things you never learn at school.
—Old Song, Author Unknown.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IN THE grade schools the children are taking nature study. In high school they learn zoology and botany. In college they broaden their knowledge of all living things by studying biology. But there is one branch of science which the textbook writers and the teachers have neglected. It is the somewhat less-than-exact science of unnatural history—the best exemplification of the sentiment expressed in the old song quoted above.

For unnatural history is one of the things "you never learn at school." To become acquainted with its fascinating facts you must go—not to books but to the source of all true knowledge, to people. And there is one class of men who are better fitted than any other to give these facts. They are the simple men who lived close to the soil and whose brief snatches of leisure between long hours of hard work were usually given over to spinning yarns for the amusement of themselves and their fellows. In telling their tall tales they invented mythical characters of heroic proportions who performed prodigious feats and whose every activity was carried out on a vast scale.

Such were the old-time lumberjack and the old-time cowboy, who have given to us Paul Bunyan, the super-lumberjack, and Pecos Bill, the super-cowboy, whom the students of folklore characterize as the best and almost only examples of native American myth heroes. More than that, in telling of the deeds of these legendary heroes, these saga-singers peopled their world with strange creatures, bizarre in appearance and fantastic in habits.

Not only did they invent their yarns for their own pleasure but they often repeated and embroidered them for the express purpose of "stuffing the tenderfoot" or "hazing the pilgrim." So if you would learn the most interesting "facts" in unnatural history, go to a lumberjack or a cowboy and by your unsophisticated manner and naive questions, give him a chance to tell you about some of the strange creatures which he has seen in the course of his career.

If it's a lumberjack you're talking to, the chances are that one of the first animals he will tell you about is the hodag. Although the hodag is now extinct, the one specimen having been captured near Rhinelander, Wis., years ago, all lumberjacks know about the hodag and how it came into being. Once upon a time there was an ox which had led an unusually hard life at the hands of his various drivers up in the north woods of Wisconsin. Among lumberjacks it is believed that the hide of an ox is invulnerable to everything but the profanity of its drivers. When the animal dies, its customary burial ceremony is cremation, and it requires seven years of continuous fire to reduce to ashes all the profanity which has accumulated in its body during its lifetime.

So when this particular ox died, a brush fire was built around its body and kept going for seven years to obliterate all the curses which had been heaped upon it in English, French, Irish, Scandinavian and German while it had toiled in the lumber camps. At the end of the seventh year the fire was allowed to die down but instead of there being left no trace of the ox, out of the heap of ashes, there rose, phoenix-like, a fearsome creature, such as is pictured above, which exhaled an obnoxious odor and the swish of whose tail made the earth tremble.

For some time this monster preyed upon the lumber camps, its favorite food being beef on the hoof. Then, according to "Lake Shore" Kearney of Wausau, Wis., an old-time lumberjack who has written a book on the hodag, E. S. Shepard of Rhinelander, Wis., another old-timer in the north woods, succeeded in capturing it by digging a hidden pit in a trail which the hodag was known to frequent and luring the hodag to it by having a young man of marathon fame and a noted ski jumper lead an ox along this trail with the hodag in hot pursuit. After its capture the hodag was put to death, skinned and mounted. For years it was exhibited in an old barn near Rhinelander and thousands of people journeyed there to view it until the barn burned down and all traces of this creature vanished from the earth. But if you go to Rhinelander today they will sell you picture post cards of the hodag as proof of the fact that it did once exist.

But even though the hodag is extinct, there are other equally interesting creatures still in the north woods, your lumberjack friend will tell you, some of whom make it exceedingly dangerous for a tenderfoot to stray far from the lumber camp by himself. Of course, you may not see them, but that doesn't prove that they are not there. If you find in the woods a set of tracks that puzzle you, they were probably left there by the tote road shagmaw. Its hind legs have the hoofs of a moose and its forelegs the paws of a bear. When it is tired of traveling on one set of legs, it continues on its way on the other, which accounts for the peculiar trail which is so baffling to hunters.

The tote road shagmaw is shy and harmless but look out for the agropelter and the gumeroo! The agropelter has a long body and arms like a spider monkey. It has a perpetual grudge against mankind and it hides in hollow trees, out of which it springs, tears off a huge branch of a tree and cracks the skull of the luckless tenderfoot as he passes by. The gumeroo lives in burned-over forests and is therefore easily avoided. It is larger than a bear and has a round leathery body which nothing can pierce. If a hunter fires at it the bullet rebounds from its tough hide, strikes the marksman and usually kills him. The only thing that can kill it is fire and often during forest fires the lumberjacks hear loud explosions which are gumeroos blowing up in the flames.

All of the foregoing animals are known to lumberjacks of the north woods from Maine to Minnesota. When the lumber industry expanded west, the lumbermen discovered many other interesting creatures which are known both to them and to the cowboys, the scene of whose activities bordered on theirs. For instance there is the roperite which is as large as a small pony and has a long rope-like beak with a slip-noose on the end. With this natural lariat the roperite catches even the swiftest jackrabbit and sometimes ropes a tenderfoot. Then there is the tripodero. It has two telescopic legs. Its beak is like the muzzle of a gun with a sight on the end. Going through the brush it raises and lowers itself to look for game and, upon seeing some, tilts itself to the right angle, sights along its beak and then lets fly with a pellet of clay, a quantity of these quids being always carried in the left cheek. The tripodero has never been known to miss a shot and as a result the mortality among tenderfeet in some parts of the West is said to be appalling.

Although lumberjacks and cowboys have been the principal contributors to the origins of unnatural history, too much credit cannot be given to editors, and especially editors of country papers, for their part in preserving it for future generations of Americans who are unlikely to "learn it at school." It is to a number of them that the author of this article is indebted for information about two creatures, without a description of which no unnatural history notebook would be complete. One is the gilly-loo or philly-loo bird and from descriptions furnished by R. F. Fuller of the Rhame (N. D.) Herald, "Uncle Jimmy" of the Harlowtown (Mont.) Times, Ben E. Manning of the Riddle (Ore.) South Umpqua News, W. M. Huff of the Clafin (Kan.) Clarion and L. O. Johnson of Livingston, Mont., a fairly accurate idea of the appearance and habits of the philly-loo can be written as follows:

The philly-loo is a comic supplement of the ancient narastus, is related to the wild coldshuts and fuzzy-billed sidewinders and in some respects resembles the galliumpus. It has a beak like a stork, one arm to guide itself, and a long lizard tail, which it usually carries in the shape of a Q and which leaves a track like a modern non-skid tire. It is covered with horse feathers and from it is obtained not only horse feathers but colt slaw. Its most distinguishing characteristic is that it flies upside down and if it were not for this fact more would be known about it. For when the hunter shoots the philly-loo it falls up instead of down and therefore but few specimens have been collected. The reason for its flying upside down is that it can thus absorb more violet rays from the blue sky and stave off rheumatism.

The other interesting animal is the gyascutus. Editha L. Watson of the Colorado Graphic, Denver, the daughter of an old-time country newspaper man, has written the following description of this creature:

The gyascutus is about the size of a white-tail deer, has ears like a rabbit, and teeth like a mountain lion. Its coat is brindle, and its eyes are red. It has a long and prehensile tail, which it wraps around rocks when it turns around, for a little extra leverage. It has telescopic legs, which arrangement enables it to graze around the sides of mountains, the two right or left legs, as the case may be, telescoping to about half the length of the other two. For this reason it can eat either to the right or the left, but has some difficulty in turning around, as it appears that the two hind legs or the two front ones will not telescope at the same time, only one side at a time having this power. Hence the long tail, which it wraps around the rocks, often pulling them out of the ground with the labor of its exertions in turning around.

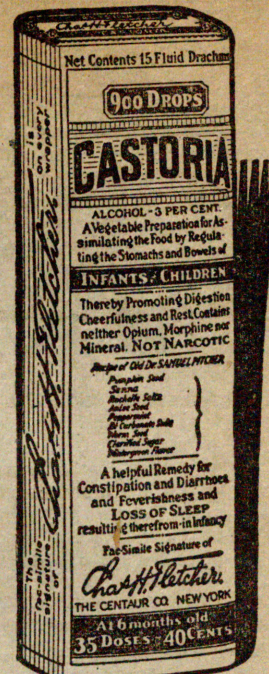

The gyascutus eats the tan and green lichens which adhere closely to rocks on hills, and in the process, wears little trails around the mountain-sides, which many people have noticed. When disturbed, this animal digs a hole in the ground very rapidly, disappearing almost immediately, so that sight of one is very rare. The holes are often mistaken for prospect holes, but the seeker for ore would be amazed to find a gyascutus upon farther digging.

The gyascutus is seen only after a snake-bite—and the subsequent treatment—by the observer. This causes one to wonder if this animal and the snake are not in some way affiliated. This is a subject which will bear investigation. Gyascuti, while rare, are not extinct, but have been run into the ground so often that they are almost unknown.

Editors not only have done a good work in the interests of unnatural history by preserving the accumulated data on many of these interesting animals, but they have also contributed to the science of their observations on some of the fauna which are found only around print shops. Go to any print shop and, if you will ask, the editor will be glad to show you some type lice. Then there is the type lout, which is an apprentice type house, whose job it is around the print shop to eat all punctuation marks which are incorrectly placed and to correct typographical errors. A lout being an awkward fellow, the type lout sometimes makes mistakes himself and that is why you sometimes find your name misspelled in the newspaper. Another interesting animal is the studio-inker. It was just by chance that one of these appeared while Artist Walters was making the sketches for this article and he was able to draw the picture of this interesting little fellow—the first time in history that its portrait has ever been made. The studio-inker is the reason why the ink bottles and ink wells on the desks of cartoonists and editors are always dry. The studio-inker eats nothing and drinks only ink.

Mother and Daughter Praise Vegetable Compound

Johnson City, N. Y.—"My daughter was only 20 years old, but for two years she worked in misery. She was all run-down, nervous, had aches and pains and no appetite. I was taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound with good results so she decided to try it. Before she had taken two bottles her appetite was better, she was more cheerful and was able to work. I cannot praise your medicine too highly. It is wonderful for mothers and for daughters. It's surely 'a friend in need'."—Mrs. L. E. HALL, 223 Floral Avenue, Johnson City, N. Y.

COUNT LUCKNER, THE SEA DEVIL

Copyright by Doubleday, Doran & Co.

by Lowell Thomas

Up the Danish coast to the Skagerrak the disguised Seeadler sailed; then westward across the British mine fields and up along the coasts of England and Scotland. A terrific hurricane sprang up, and under almost full sail Count Luckner and his companions started to run the British blockade. They passed through its several lines without seeing a ship, for all the blockading vessels had sought shelter in the lee of the islands. Taking the northerly course to the Atlantic, the Seeadler was blown by the gale far toward the polar zone and could not be handled because of the frozen rigging. But the wind shifted and on Christmas day they turned to the south. Then they were stopped by a British cruiser, and two officers boarded the supposed Norwegian ship and began a searching examination of the crew and papers. Luckner and his men passed the test with great success.

CHAPTER III—Continued

"There were rumors at home in Norway that two cruisers and sixteen German submarines had put out of port."

The search officer's comrade, who had been looking around the cabin, came over to us when he heard all this.

"I think we had better be going," he spoke up suddenly.

"Yes," replied the other, and they went on deck.

They made no attempt at questioning the sailors or investigating the sailors' belongings.

"Your papers are all right, captain," said the search officer, "but you will have to wait here for an hour until you get a signal to proceed."

"All right, Mister Officer."

One of my boys, who was of a pessimistic turn of mind, heard this. As he walked away from my cabin he said out loud to himself:

"Everything is lost."

Down below were the members of my other crew, waiting in the dark. They were right beneath the floor of the deck, straining their ears to catch any word that might give them an idea how things were going on deck. They heard the exclamation, "Everything is lost," and took it for the official word that we were discovered and for the command to do what was to be done in that case. They lit the fuses of the three bombs that were to blow up the ship, and waited for the hatches to be opened to let them on deck to the boats. The fuses would burn for fifteen minutes.

The British were in their boat now, trying to push off. But you can't hold a sailing ship in one place like a steamer. She keeps drifting. And the suction of the Seeadler as she drifted held their boat so it couldn't get away. What was still worse, it kept slipping aft, and if it got under our stern, they would have been sure to see our propeller. A sailship with a propeller? Yes, sometimes, but we would have been done for, as there was nothing to that effect in our papers. Seizing a rope, I tossed it overboard toward them.

"Take the rope, Mister Officer, take the rope," I shouted as though clumsily trying to help them.

That made them look up, so that the rope might not fall on their heads. I heaved the rope just as they were sliding around our stern and away. The officers thanked me, and one of them, angry with his men for not being able to push the boat off, exclaimed:

"I have only fools on my boat."

"Yes, maybe you have," I thought, "and maybe you are the worst-fooled one of all!"

My stomach was quite normal now. I was so happy that I even felt as though I could digest that quid of tobacco. The men on deck felt like cheering and singing, but they had orders to go on about their jobs as though nothing unusual had been going on, until the cruiser was far and away. They just grinned, but so broad were the grins that I thought they would split their faces.

My first thought was to bring the happy news to the boys in the darkness down below. I went to one of the secret hatches, which they had fastened from within.

"Open," I shouted.

There were vague sounds below.

"Open up," I called again.

Then I heard a muffled voice say:

"Open the flood valves."

"What's that?" I yelled. "What's the matter? Open the hatch!"

The hatch opened. I saw troubled faces. I could hear water rushing in to the ship.

"By Joe," I shouted, "are you trying to sink my boat?"

I could hear men running below to all parts of the ship. I climbed down roaring. One of the men spoke up.

"They are cutting the fuses and closing the flood valves."

"Fuses, flood valves, by Joe. How's that happen, by Joe?"

Then one of the men said: "But some one called down that all was lost! Afterward you called 'open' and we thought you meant open the flood valves."

The fuses had been burning for eight minutes out of their fifteen, and hundreds of gallons of water were pouring into the ship.

By Joe, I looked for the fellow who said "All is lost." He came forward at once and confessed.

"I wasn't calling to the men below. I merely said it to myself."

"Why do you say 'all is lost,' by Joe, just when everything is fine?"

"Well, captain, when the Englishman said that we would have to wait for an hour, I thought to myself that the game was up. It means that he is keeping us waiting while he sends a wireless to Copenhagen asking about the Irma, when there is no Irma."

"By Joe," I said, "that's right."

In our excitement, neither I nor my officers had thought about the wireless. It had not occurred to us to ask ourselves why we had been ordered to stand by for a whole hour. We didn't even think of Lloyd's Register. The search officer might have gone back to his ship to look up the Irma in the Register, where there was no Irma.

For days I had been on deck in the storm and in the ice regions. For the past half hour I had gone through worse turmoil even than that. And now, when everything seemed clear, the sky looked black again and that quid of tobacco started getting in its dirty work. I went to the rail and hung there on my elbows, staring through my binoculars at the Avenger and watching for the flag signal. My hand shook, and instead of only one I could see three cruisers in my glass. I handed it to Leademann and while he took a look I leaned there with the code book in my hand, ready to decode the signal when it came.

I don't know how long it was, fifteen minutes or an hour, but finally three little flags went up the signal rope.

The Seeadler.

Old Imperturbable Leademann steadied his glass. At last he made out the signal:

"T-M-B."

I thumbed the book clumsily. It seemed as though I would never find T-M-B. But there it was. It meant "Planet." Nonsense. Read the signal again.

I was getting weaker and weaker, whether from the anxiety or from that quid, I don't know. This time he read:

"T-X-B."

Pages, columns, and then the right place. . . . Continue voyage.

I felt as though my heart had two valves instead of one and was pumping madly through both. I sat down and breathed heavily. Instead of going about their ordinary tasks, my men wanted to yell like Indians.

Hello, what's this? The Avenger, with her 15,000 tons driven by 100,000 horse-power engines, was racing straight at us. Huge streams of smoke and great flames like torches poured out of her three funnels as her safety valves blew out from the over-pressure of her boilers. Just as she got on top of us she swerved off. At her stern flew a signal. I did not need a code book. I knew that signal by heart—Happy Voyage. We raised the signal—thanks—and dipped our Norwegian flag three times.

The British had behaved like gentlemen toward us. I think the way they pointed their guns at us when they came up to us was a bit of a joke. The hour they made us wait was, I think, to enable them to make wireless inquiries about the story we told of German cruisers and submarines.

The search officer did his work courteously and well. No seaman should try to make another seaman ridiculous.

Firefly's Tail Light Diffuses Little Heat

The fireflies, or "lightning bugs," which dance in the twilight, carry torches that burn on the same principle as a lighted candle. That is to say, they combine a combustible substance with oxygen and produce light. The great advantage enjoyed by the firefly is that his tail light makes so little heat; it can fairly be called "cold light."

The substance consumed to produce the firefly's light is luciferin. The shining of fireflies, and of other animals and plants, used to be called phosphorescence, because it looked like phosphorus. We were disguised so well that he could have suspected nothing. In his place, I should have been fooled exactly as he was, and so would any other officer.

"And now, boys, let's celebrate Christmas!"

We dumped our deck load of lumber into the sea, and cleared the deck for a big time. I had a Christmas tree that I had brought from home. We set it up. Before the Seeadler left port, Fraulein Bertha Krupp had sent us a huge box full of Christmas presents, something for every man. We opened it and found clothing, cigars, pipes, cigarettes, cigar holders, knives, liquor, soft drinks, and musical instruments.

It was the merriest Christmas of our lives. Singing "Yo-ho" and cheered up with many good bottles of rum, we headed south to play our role as buccaniers.

CHAPTER IV

We Capture the Gladys Royal and the Lundy Island

"All hands on deck!"

Aloft my boys flew, into the rigging and up the ratlines like monkeys.

"Loose the fore-taups!" boomed up from the quarter deck.

"All gone, the fore-taups!" they sang out.

"Loose the ga'ts'ls and stays'ls!"

The sails were sheeted home and were filling out. We didn't lose much time in getting her away. Lying over on her beam ends and running before the wind, we set our course for Madeira.

We knew that just off Gibraltar would be one of our best hunting grounds, so we cleared away the remains of our Norwegian camouflage, and after a few days we were as spick and clean and orderly as a German auxiliary cruiser should be. We were the Irma no longer, but the Seeadler now, although I felt a pang of regret at letting go the name that had served us so well and brought us luck.

There was constant labor on the motor. The lubricating oil we had was of poor quality. Oil, like many other things, had become scarce in Germany. Our enterprise had the enthusiastic support of only a few of the officials at the admiralty. The others thought it certainly foredoomed to failure, and did not want to risk too much on it. Among these were the heads of the department that supplied us with oil. A sailing vessel under the pressure of sail nearly always lists to one side. The work of the motor was hampered by a leaning position. We sailed most of the time throughout our cruise with the motor dismantled and under repairs.

We had only two guns, and only one at a time could be brought into action against an enemy. Our orders were to attack sailing ships only. Wind-jammer against steamship was considered a ridiculous idea. We would not need great broadsides of cannon in capturing sailing vessels. We tried to make up for our lack of gun power by skill and precision in handling the guns we had. Our gun crew worked incessantly at drill and target practice, and schooled themselves to such quickness and accuracy of fire that the power of our armament, in effect, was doubled.

Our lookout posts were excellent. We had a crow's nest with a comfortable seat high up on the mast. Only a man at ease watches well. A second lookout was on the foremast, where a petty officer was perched. I offered ten pounds sterling and a bottle of champagne to whoever should report a ship first. A jealous rivalry grew up between the lookouts. In each raged a tremendous thirst for that bottle of champagne. All day long eager eyes swept the horizon.

On January 9, off Gibraltar, the shout rang out:

"Ship ahoy."

On our larboard side was a large steamer, heading toward us. Flying our Norwegian colors, we turned to meet her. She flew no flag and carried no name. The British were the only people who sent their boats out without names. She looked of British build, too. Our orders were not to tackle steamers. Well, you can promise a lot. We raised the signal:

"Chronometer time, please."

A sailing ship long away from port rarely has the correct time. Our request was reasonable enough. The steamer signaled that she understood us, and came to the windward so that we could leave to. I wore my great-coat to conceal my uniform. Those of the crew that had rifles hid themselves behind the railings.

The steamer came near, ready to give the sleepy old Norwegian the time.

"Shall we tackle him?" I asked one of my sailors who was crouched next to me peering through a loophole.

"Sure, let's take him. He's an Englishman."

Centenarians are common in South Africa, and unless persons are considerably over one hundred their age is not regarded as extraordinary. A bushman, named Jordan, considered an excellent authority to be between one hundred and twenty and one hundred and thirty years old, claims to be South Africa's oldest inhabitant. He is only 4 feet 9 inches high, and is still very active, has good sight, but is rather deaf. His simple wants are seen to by kindly disposed people, so that the old fellow has no need to draw on his old age pension, which he is banking, he says, for a rainy day.

My skin was in very bad condition and I could not understand what made it clear up so quickly.

Childrens Hallowe'en mirth.

November dawned, dark heavy clouds
Hung on the eastern sky.
The sun arose above the rim,
A gloomy day disguise.

The western sky was azure blue
With filmy clouds of gray
Speeding on with changing hue
As brighter grew the day.

A cloud rolled by, the sun burst forth
It kissed the dew drops fair,
And as by magic one by one
Was lifted in the air.

The day advanced and brighter
grew,
Until the sunset hour drew near.
Breezes stirred the scattered leaves,
Again the world seemed drear.

The sun sank lower in the west,
The clouds to copper turned,
Then suddenly, with bands of gold
Each cloud could be discerned.

A film of gray, now red, now orange.
That rosy hue, so softly sent,
No artists brush could ever paint
The colors as they came and went.

The Master Artist, deftly placed
The tints that came and went.
The sun now dropped below the rim
The day, alas was spent.

The amber clouds grew slowly dim,
Reluctant to depart,
The artful passing of it all
Would fill a throbbing heart.

The shadows fell, bands of lingering light
Above the horizon hung.
That too passed on, darkness filled
all space,
Another day had gone.

I thanked God for my sight and mind,
That I could see and feel and know
To gaze with rapture and delight
And glimpse the Heaven here below.

SHE MAKES BIG GAIN BECAUSE OF A LOSS

Mrs. Amy Boulter of 135 West
Eighty-third street, New York, a widow with two young sons, just has been handed a certificate for two hundred shares of stock in the Radio Corporation of America. The stock replaced two hundred shares of original no par value common stock represented by two certificates which were lost after Mrs. Boulter put them in the mail on May 22, 1923. The transaction which just has been completed was the happy end of a long wait by Mrs. Boulter for the expiration of the legal period in which the shares represented by the lost certificates might have been presented for exchange.

MRS. AMY BOULTER

Many times in those years while she was supporting herself and her sons by nursing and renting some of the rooms in her apartment, Mrs.
Boulter says now, she wished she could sell her stock.

When the time of waiting was up a few days ago Mrs. Boulter found that the $811 she invested through a broker on the installment plan in the then new enterprise of radio had grown to approximately $20,000.

Lighthouse Illumination

Most of the American lighthouses guarding ships against coastal rocks have now run the complete gamut of lighting in the last 200 years. They began with fish oil and then proceeded through sperm oil, rapeseed or colza oil, lard oil, vaporized kerosene with incandescent mantles and finally electricity upon which main dependence is put nowadays.

Foresaw the Telephone

The possibility of telephone or wireless telegraph was evidently in the mind of Galileo, for in 1632 he referred to "the secret art" by which through the sympathy of magnetic needles men might converse at long distance.

Good News

For Auto Owners

An analysis recently completed by The Automobile Club of Illinois in which it was definitely shown that incomes from the three cents gas have been found to be sufficient to permit the Illinois state license plates being reduced to one-half of their present price, or even to institute a blanket fee of $5.00 for state plates, regardless of the size of the car.

The figures secured in the compilation are such that the Club will champion the cause of the automobile owner and advocate a reduction in the fees for state license plates.
Even with a reduction of 50 per cent in license fees it is conservatively estimated that a surplus would remain amounting to over $8,000,000 at the end of 1932.

"Now as to the matter of the $8,000,000 surplus, moneys rightfully belonging to the autoists of Illinois, no better means could be provided for than that already mentioned," declared Si Mayer, President of the Club. "With the present gasoline tax, Federal-aid, license plate fees and other revenues at the disposal of the State Highway department yearly, it is obvious that the surplus of the above amount would be entirely out of place and should be returned to the auto owner in the form of reduced license plate fees."

The gigantic growth of the gasoline tax revenues as derived in the United States is best noted by the following figures. In 1927 the public paid $259,000,000 to the various states with their purchases of gasoline. In 1928 the total ran well above $300,000,000 and for the current year indications are that they will exceed $400,000,000.

Illinois, the last state to enact a gasoline tax is one of the six largest gasoline consuming states in the United States. In the matter of gasoline tax revenue, California is first closely followed by Pennsylvania, Texas, Illinois, Michigan and New York.

At present, Illinois plates cost car owners an annual fee of $8, $12, $20 and $25, according to the number of horse power in the engine. Trucks have a separate listing.

Bar Worthless

Securities

Upwards of half a billion dollars in worthless and questionable securities have been barred from the Illinois investment market since the legislature created the state securities department ten years ago. Secretary of State William J. Stratton, who administers this office, announced today.

In this ten year period the department has qualified over five billion dollars worth of securities for sale. Commenting on this figure, Secretary of State Stratton declared that as times goes on the great wealth of Chicago and Illinois, with its almost unlimited ability to absorb securities, undoubtedly will lead to a larger volume of business in this department.

The securities department, the secretary of state said, through its power over the registration of brokers has been able to drive out of the business of selling securities a great number of crooked individuals and, through the power to require a substantial bond, has protected the public against inexperienced brokers and brokers with little capital investment. He stated that as a result of the efforts of the securities department bucket shops have almost disappeared.

"The average investor," Secretary of State Stratton said, "has little time and practically no facilities for investigating the merit of securities that are offered. He cannot find out whether claims made by sellers of securities are true or,
in fact, whether the seller is a reputable dealer or not. Of course, the securities department would not be justified in trying to substitute its judgement for that of the investor, nor can it properly interfere with the right of a man to speculate and take chances with his money. It can, however, and it does, endeavor to see that the investor is not imposed upon by false representations and it can at least strive to keep dishonest dealers from operating."

Mr. Stratton disclosed that in the current year up to October 1, $650, 000,000 worth of securities were approved for sale by the department; 750 brokers and dealers and about 3500 agents or salesmen were registered.

In conclusion the secretary of state expressed the hope that in the near future more educational work can be carried on to teach the investing public how to protect itself.

Manhattan Isle Has Many Telephone Central Offices

Each Star Represents a Telephone Central Office, Some Having Switchboards of the Largest Capacity.

WHEN Peter Minuit, Director-General of the Dutch colony of Manhattan, in 1626 bought the island from the Indians for a few trinkets, the intrinsic value of which was about twenty-four dollars in the coin of the realm, his purchase covered a tract of land twelve and one-half miles long and two and one-half miles in width at its widest point.
Undoubtedly the aforesaid dutchman got a bargain, but even the shrewd trader could hardly have foreseen the great metropolis which has spread over the 14,209 acres purchased from the aboriginals at so trifling a cost. He might have visualized a great seaport but his wildest fancy could not have conjured up a magic city of sky-scraper buildings, great bridges and teeming millions, of which the island of Manhattan is the heart.
He could not, of course, have conceived the telephone nor the marvelous telephone system that Manhattan requires to keep its business and social life in step with progress and which make the island the most telephoned spot on the face of the globe. Of the more than 1,700,000 telephones in Greater New York, Manhattan has more than 900,000. Of the 146 central offices serving Greater New York, 56 central offices are on the island of Manhattan and some of these are equipped with switchboards of the largest capacity, capable of serving more than 10,000 subscribers and all these switchboards handle more than 4,600,000 calls a day, not including calls from out of town. Notwithstanding this tremendous concentration of central office equipment on the island of Manhattan, the increased requirements are so rapid that new central offices are constantly being added.

AFTER THE SHIP COMES INTO PORT:-

Nowhere, not even in the Navy is such strict discipline maintained as in the Merchant Marine. This is true not only in our own shipping fleet but doubly so in the Merchant Marine of Europe. The master of a ship is not only the judge but the jury as well aboard his vessel. After the ship has been hosed into her pier by a fleet of noisy little tugs, and the last passengers have gone down the gangplank to greet their friends, then, and not until then does the crew get a real chance to relax. Thousands of people came down to the piers to wish their friends welcome. The Ile de France, one of the floating palaces of the French Line carries a crew of 812 and has accommodations for 1638 passengers. The recreation period for the crew is naturally looked forward to eagerly, for then there is a let up in strict discipline maintained aboard an ocean greyhound like this. The photograph shows how some members of the crew spend their recreation period. Music is loved by all, so out comes their portable Brunswick Panatrope with the jazz records they prefer and dance and song reign supreme. The lower photo shows a view at the pier hours before the departure of the ship. The insert shows the most famous statue in the world, the Statue of Liberty, gracefully bidding welcome to visitors from the old world and symbolizing the liberty and freedom of our land. (Herbert Photos, N. Y.)

STATE CAPITOL NEWS

Hiram L. Williamson, Secretary of the Illinois Prison Association, is one of the members of the state board of pardons and paroles, who had finished hearing a large number of cases at the state penal institutions, recently met in Springfield for a two-day session to pass on recommendations made by committees. Under a recent decision of the State Supreme court, prisoners serving ten years to life sentences must serve ten years before they are paroled, unless they are pardoned by the governor. Governor Emmerson has in his possession recommendations in 40 cases, some of which apply to ten years to life prisoners, it is said, but no action has been taken. While 647 such prisoners are in the penal institutions, each case will be considered on its merits and recommendations made to Governor Emmerson in the same manner as would have been followed for possible parole.

State, county and city officials joined in tribute to Robert Scholes, twice speaker of the lower house of the Illinois assembly, at funeral services held for him in Peoria on October 26. Gov. Louis L. Emmerson, Lieut. Gov. Fred E. Sterling and Speaker David Shanahan were among the honorary pallbearers. Mr. Scholes was largely instrumental in the establishment of the state department of fish and game and the enactment of the present game laws. Throughout his public career he was known as a champion of labor and was author of numerous amendments to the workmen's compensation act. Among those who deplore his death are assemblymen whose initiation in the assembly was made easier by the willingly given assistance of Speaker Scholes.

Thirty-six million Christmas seals have been received by the Illinois Tuberculosis and Public Health association and are now being distributed to the local tuberculosis associations in 101 counties in the state. The seals are to raise funds for the campaign against tuberculosis carried on throughout the state. In addition to the seals, 319,200 posters and leaflets will be sent to all corners of the state. The campaign opens the day following Thanksgiving.

One hundred and three opinions were filed by the Supreme court in the office of Clerk Charles W. Vail, at the close of the October term. Many cases of state-wide interest were decided. The case in which the greatest interest was manifested was the parking ordinance of the city of Chicago to be invalid. Since the decision on this case Mr. Vail's office has been receiving requests for copies of the opinion from many throughout the country.

The state department of agriculture will conduct a laboratory short course for Illinois seed producers and dealers during the month of November. The added service to agriculturists has been arranged by Director Clarence F. Buck, Phil Haner, plant industry superintendent, and A. C. Wilson, chief seed analyst. The extension of the work of the seed laboratory branch of the agricultural department has been given the approval of Gov. Louis L. Emmerson.

First tests of the 3-cent gasoline tax law are to be made in the November term of the Sangamon county Circuit court. The test cases, selected out of the 102 injunction suits filed, will be taken to the Supreme court, no matter what the lower court's decision may be. Appeal from the Sangamon court will be made to the February term of the State Supreme court. Another deluge of gas tax suits based on September collections is expected to follow. Suits filed thus far involve August collections, the first month in which the law was effective.

Director Leo H. Lowe of the department of trade and commerce has notified Ray Krebaum, assistant cashier of the State bank of Virden, of his appointment as an examiner in the division of insurance.

Gov. Louis L. Emmerson has appointed Dr. W. H. Welch of Lexington as chief veterinarian in the department of agriculture. Dr. Welch succeeds Dr. F. A. Laird of Auburn.

Approximately 700 delegates are expected to attend the silver jubilee convention of the Illinois Telephone association in Springfield, November 20 and 21 according to A. J. Parsons, secretary-treasurer of the association. Among the prominent speakers to appear on the two-day program are Gov. Louis L. Emmerson and Charles W. Hadley, Wheaton, chairman of the Illinois Commerce commission.

A case of state-wide interest submitted to the Supreme court by Charles W. Vail, clerk of the court, and due for a decision at the December term, is the one from Cook county in which there is involved the legality of the raise in rates by the Modern Woodmen of America, which action by the organization is claimed by the appellants to be discriminatory. A number of injunction suits have been filed in various parts of the state, and the action of the Supreme court will be awaited with interest.

Farm conditions in the eighth federal reserve district, including 41 Illinois counties, were described as generally fair to good in a farm income survey for 1929 made public by the St. Louis chamber of commerce. The report was based on reports from farm agents, bankers and business men of the district and embraced a study of farm production in the seven states comprising the district.

New highways now under construction in South America are being built according to specifications worked out on the Bates test road southwest of Springfield, Frank T. Sheets, chief engineer of the state department of highways, stated recently. Mr. Sheets, who was an official delegate from the United States to the second Pan-American Highway congress at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, said that South American highway engineers are enabled to avoid many of the errors made by American pioneers in the construction of hard surfaced highways and are adopting American methods of highway financing and traffic control, as well as construction methods.

Plans have been announced for a survey of the needs of physically handicapped children in every county of the state. The work will be under the direction of a special commission provided by the last general assembly consisting of Rodney Brandon, director of public welfare, Francis G. Blair, superintendent of public instruction and Dr. Andy Hall, director of public health. Mr. Brandon reported that it was the desire of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks to supply the names and addresses of all children who might be in need of treatment, and that the Elks fraternity would endeavor to care for them. The county superintendent of schools is to be chairman of a county executive committee, which will also include a physician to be designated by Dr. Hall and a social service worker to be named by Mr. Brandon. Wherever necessary the size of the county committee will be increased. The schools in each county will be called upon to assist in making the survey.

A special meeting of the Illinois State Historical society for the primary purpose of rousing cities and counties to the importance of preserving current and past history through tools, relics, pictures and documents reflecting their growth, was held in Joliet recently. The list of speakers included many prominent historians of the state. Paul M. Angle, secretary of the Abraham Lincoln association, spoke on "Abraham Lincoln, Land Owner and Investor."

Two men have been arrested and 50 stolen cars recovered through an investigation of an automobile theft ring operating in Central Illinois, it was stated by Phil Harmon, chief state automobile investigator. The gang had headquarters in Champaign, where 25 of the stolen cars were recovered, the investigator stated, adding that other cars were found at Decatur, Bloomington, Hoopeston and Atwood. A third member of the gang is sought.

In the absence of expressed statutory limitations, Attorney General Carlstrom has ruled that commissioners of Canada thistles have the power to cut or destroy any part or portion of a crop of grain where the weeds are growing in the field if they cannot be exterminated in any other manner. Only such part of the crop should be cut or damaged as is necessary in order to destroy the thistle, and the owner of the land on which the thistles are growing must first be notified and requested to exterminate the weeds, the attorney general warned. Costs of cutting the weeds are assessed against the land owner.

R. B. Miller and Stanley S. Locke, foresters connected with the state department of conservation, headed a party of about 25 members of the Ohio valley section of the Society of American Foresters on an inspection tour of forestry conditions in southern Illinois. Representatives of Illinois, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Missouri and Kentucky made up the party.

Nearly one-half of the people who are now twenty years old have suffered one or more painful injuries, according to Dr. Andy Hall, state health director, who points out that the automobile and the development of industrial life have contributed materially to this condition. "Records of freshmen matriculation at the University of Illinois show that 30 per cent of the women have suffered one or more painful injuries before reaching Urbana," Doctor Hall stated. "In general these college students are a rather selected group who have been better protected from accidents than the population in general. They have not been employed in factories, shops, and mines, where liability to injury is heightened. Thus a new hazard created by man himself has developed into the greatest single impediment to life that people under twenty years old have to face."

Led by its chairman, William H. Malone, the Illinois tax commission continued its work of equalizing assessments on real property throughout Illinois, when orders of re-assessment were forwarded to local officials in Williamson and Franklin counties, the Illinois Agricultural association has announced. The two orders followed investigations of assessed valuations and selling prices on farm lands, town and city real estate by the farm bureaus and I. A. A. in these counties.

Improved Uniform International Sunday School Lesson

Lesson for November 10

WORLD PEACE THROUGH MUTUAL UNDERSTANDING

LESSON TEXT—Isa. 2:2-4; 11:6-10; 19:23-25; Acts 17:22-28; John 4:20, 21. GOLDEN TEXT—They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Friends the World Around. JUNIOR TOPIC—Friends the World Around.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Working for World Peace.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Our Share in Promoting International Understanding.

The lesson title is somewhat misleading. It is not world peace through mutual understanding, but through the actual coming of Jesus Christ, the Messiah, and the establishment of His kingdom on the earth.

1. Messiah's Kingdom Established (Isa. 2:2-4).

By "mountain" in the Scriptures is meant a kingdom (Dan. 2:35, Rev. 13:1, 17:9-11).

1. Its position (v. 2).

It shall be in a place of supremacy. The kingdoms of the world shall then become the kingdom of Christ (Rev. 11:15).

2. The restored kingdom of the teacher of the gentiles (v. 3).

God called Israel and made her the priestly nation in order that she might make known His name among other nations. Now, after many centuries of apostasy and rebellion, the chosen nation comes into its own. God's favor will be so outstanding as to gain the attention of the whole world.

3. The Divine Judge (v. 4).

The problems of the world which are so beyond man's capacity to solve will be adjudicated by the One who is all wise, and He shall then rebuke many people. Because of this rebuke, they shall convert their implements of war into implements of husbandry, and shall learn war no more.

11. Description of His Reign (Isa. 11:6-10).

Universal peace between men and animals will prevail. In this picture each animal is coupled with that one upon which it naturally preys.

1. The wolf shall dwell with the lamb.

2. The leopard shall lie down with the kid.

3. The calf, the young lion and the fatling shall lie down together.

4. A little child shall lead them.

5. The cow and bear shall feed together.

6. The lion shall eat straw like the ox.

7. The sucking child shall play upon the hole of the asp.

8. The weaned child shall put its hand upon the den of the cockatrice.

The coming of Christ will have a regenerating effect upon the whole creation. The only peace for the world will be when Jesus Christ, the Prince of Peace, shall reign.

111. Peace Among the Nations by Means of the Knowledge of God (Acts 17:22-28).

The way to bring peace among the nations is to make God known. Paul began his discourse on Mars' hill by referring to one of their inscriptions, "To the unknown God," and declared that it was his purpose to make known this God unto them. By using this as his point of contact he made declarations about God and man which if recognized will tend to the unity of the nations.

1. Declaration concerning God (vv. 24, 25).

(1) The Creator of the universe.

(2) Lord of heaven and earth. Being essentially spirit, He demands heart worship, and being Creator He cannot be confined to an earthly temple.

(3) His active providence. He declared that in Him we live and move and have our being.

2. Declaration concerning man (vv. 26-31).

(1) We are the offspring of God (v. 28).

(2) Nations have their place by God's purpose. (3) Men should seek God. The truth thus declared concerning God and man, if received, will remove national and racial barriers.

IV. The Basis of National Union (John 4:20, 21).

The coming union of nations will not be in forms or symbols, but in spirit. The union of the race must be around Jesus Christ. Being united to Him as head, men are brought into fellowship with God. The Christian church is the supreme unifier of nations (Eph. 4:3-6). If we would hasten world peace, let us with diligence and enthusiasm endeavor to induce men to give allegiance to Jesus Christ.

TASTY FOODS

A most wholesome soup which will serve at least three good-sized soup plates may be prepared from a can of tomato soup mixed with a pint of milk which has been lightly thickened with a tablespoonful each of melted butter and flour cooked together and added to the hot milk. Season with salt and pepper, add a pinch of soda and pour in the hot tomato soup. Bring to scalding and serve with toasted cheese crackers.

Boston Cream Pie.—Beat three eggs well, add three-fourths of a cupful of sugar and beat until the sugar is dissolved; then add one-fourth of a cupful of water, one cupful of flour, a teaspoonful of baking powder and one-half teaspoonful of lemon extract. Mix and bake in a deep layer cake pan. Turn out, split and fill with:

Orange Cream Filling.—Soak one tablespoonful of gelatin in three tablespoonsful of cold water; dissolve over hot water. Add one cupful of orange juice, one-fourth cupful of sugar, the whites of two eggs beaten stiff; mix lightly when slightly thick with one-half cupful of whipped cream. Spread between the layers and cover the top with sweetened and flavored whipped cream.

Grated orange peel may be mixed with sugar and placed in a small covered jar in the ice chest and it will be ready for all sorts of dishes, adding a touch of color as well as flavor.

Codfish Cakes.—This is by no means a plebian dish for it ranks as one of the favorite dishes in many marble palaces.

Mix two cupfuls of rice potato and one cupful of shredded codfish which has been scalded and drained. Add a tablespoonful of butter, salt and pepper to taste, make into balls, roll in egg and crumbs and fry in deep fat. Seasoned mashed potatoes left over from dinner may be used instead of the freshly cooked, using the same proportions.

Something Different.

Orange bread for sandwiches makes a most dainty loaf and one which simply spread with butter needs no filling.

Orange Bread.—Sift three cupfuls of flour, four teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one-half teaspoonful of salt. If candied peel is not at hand take two orange skins, boil up in water to cover and remove most of the white pulp.

Chop fine, or use one-half cupful of finely chopped candied peel. Add one-half cupful of sugar, one cupful of milk, one egg and one-fourth cupful of walnut meats. Put into a well greased bread pan and let stand ten minutes, then bake in a moderate oven forty-five minutes.

Ginger Ale Salad.—Soak two tablespoonfuls of gelatin in one-half cupful of water five minutes, then dissolve over hot water. When cool add one and one-half cupfuls of ginger ale, two tablespoonfuls each of lemon juice and sugar, one cupful each of diced pineapple and orange juice and pulp and seeded white grapes; sprinkle lightly with a saltspoonful of salt. Turn into small molds and chill. Serve on lettuce with mayonnaise.

Orange Shortcake.—One of the most tasty of desserts which takes but a few moments to prepare after the fruit is ready, is this: Prepare a rich biscuit dough and bake as large biscuits. Split and spread with butter while hot, cover with orange sauce and serve at once. Prepare the oranges by peeling and removing all white membrane, separate into sections, cut fine, cover with sugar to taste and let stand for twenty minutes.

Orange Honey Cakes.—Take two-thirds of a cupful of fat, one cupful of sugar, two oranges juice and rind, four well beaten eggs, four and one-half cupfuls of pastry flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt, four teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one and one-half cupfuls of walnut meats and one and one-half cupfuls of honey. Cream the fat and sugar. Add orange juice and rind to the beaten eggs. Mix and sift the dry ingredients and stir in the nut meats. Add the honey and when well blended bake in cup cakes. Frost with orange frosting.

Chicken Turbot.—Take three chickens, cut into pieces and stew. Roll in crumbs, season, place in a baking pan with a pint of cream, one pint of chicken stock, and one can of mushrooms. Thicken with two tablespoonfuls each of butter and flour cooked together. Cover with crumbs and bake.

Orange Marshmallow Fluff.—Whip one cupful of cream, fold in one-fourth cupful of sugar and one cupful of quartered marshmallows, one cupful of orange juice and pulp. Serve well chilled.

"My boy, 7, would not eat. I gave him Vinol and the way he eats and plays now makes me happy. He gained 15 pounds."—J. E. Adres.

Vinol is a delicious compound of cod liver peptone, iron, etc. The very first bottle often adds several pounds weight to thin children or adults. Nervous, easily tired, anemic people are surprised how Vinol gives new pep, sound sleep and a BIG appetite. Tastes delicious. In Mokena by R. Hensel. In Tinley Park by H. C. Vogt, Druggists.

TINLEY TOWN TOPICS

By CLARENCE GOESEL

Mr. and Mrs. John Worth and Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Goessel were visitors in Henry Duff home, Blue Island Wednesday. Many of Tinley folk will remember Mrs. Duff as Miss Selma Brueggeman, former Tinley Park resident.

Many Towns-people were again present at the monthly village meeting held Monday evening in the village hall. A few bills were presented which were ordered paid.

One item of importance, was a letter addressed to the village, notifying them, that all people draining water from their properties into the Drainage ditch, must first have permission from the Drainage Board. This letter was written by Albert Krusemark, attorney representing the Drainage Board.

A resolution was also brought before the Board, requesting a special assessment for the furnishing of water to the new forty-acre tract on the southeast side of town, recently purchased by the Elmore Co., from the Andres Estate. This will come up for a hearing at the Tinley Park village hall in Nov. 19th or thereabouts.

The matter of police protection was again brought up, and the Board passed a resolution by a vote of 4 to 2 to dismiss the present Chief of Police, who was recently appointed for one month. Mayor Funk asked the Board members if they felt they wanted a policeman, the answer being, that the majority of the Board felt that the majority of the Villagers felt that they needed a man capable of riding a motorcycle or running an automobile, and act in a moment's notice. When Mayor Funk asked what they wished to do, a motion was made, seconded and carried to the effect that a meeting be held in the next few days, and composed of the entire Board and president, and thoroughly discussed so that an agreement can be made and this furor ended.

Many of the members of the Lutheran Church of Tinley Park attended the celebration of the 400th year ceremonies of the writing of Luther's Catechism, at Blue Island Sunday afternoon.

Many of the villagers and Legionnaires of Tinley are planning on attending a dance to be given by the Hegewisch Post at Hegewisch this coming Saturday.

A great many of the members of the Tinley Bowling League seem to be "cheating a little" or they only are "trying to catch up" as Mr. Hartman of the Homewood Recreation Parlors, reports that Sunday is also a big Tinley Day.

Many of the members have purchased new bowling balls and shoes, so they really must mean business.

The following are on the sick list: Mrs. Wm. Stoehr, Mrs. C. Schilling, Mrs. Catherine Kimmel of Blue Island, C. Guthaus, Albert Ihlenfeld, J. H. Bormet, C. Mager, Miss Louise Reiber. Teacher Schmidt is able to teach school again.

JACOB FUNK AND FAMILY

Mrs. John Swisher and Mrs. August Mesenbrink were guests of their son Jack Swisher and Walter Mesenbrink at a theatre party Wednesday night in Chicago. They saw the play "Hold Everything."

An Achievement program was held at the Tinley school on Wednesday evening. The pupils in the room of Mrs. Sandidge the principle, put on the achievement program. The children in the room of Miss Vogt had as their feature a song by the boys and a drill by the girls. Miss Robinson's pupils put on a very interesting dialog Jim Crow. They also acted out the well known cartoon by McCutcheon entitled "Indian Summer." Miss Morningsstar's room presented a very neat offering entitled "The Painted Doll." Miss McClaughry country life director also took part in the program. Several musical numbers were played by the pupils of the various rooms and a number of interesting readings were also given.

The Tinley Park fire department was called out at four o'clock Monday morning to fight a fire on the old Schmidt farm five miles northeast of Tinley Park. The farm is a part of the forest preserve system now. The barn and other buildings burned to the ground. The Midlothian and Blue Island fire departments also were called.

It is estimated that about $2000 worth of damage was done as 300 chickens worth $1.25 a piece were killed by the flames and 20 tons of hay burned and all of the farm machinery in addition to the barns was destroyed.

Mr. and Mrs. John Funk spent Sunday in Hammond at the Wm. Kohn home.
